RABBIT

2
RABBIT number two.
ISBN 9781921986048

Editor: Jessica L. Wilkinson
Editorial Assistance and Photography: Nicholas Walton-Healey
Design & Layout: Ari Dyball

Special thanks to Graeme Connelly, Vera Di Campli, Bonny Cassidy, David Carlin, Francesca Rendle-Short and Simon Strong for their advice and support.

Visit our website: rabbitpoetry.wordpress.com

Join our mailing list for subscription information and news: rabbitpoetry@hotmail.com

RABBIT is a quarterly journal of poetry published by Cussonia Press.

www.cussoniapress.com
www.custombookcentre.com.au

Cover photographic illustration by Nicholas Walton-Healey
Rabbit

Number Two: The Food Issue
Spring 2011

Rabbit Editorial Aperitif

Rabbit Poems:

Allison Browning

Maps
This is How
Liquor and Linen

Ann Vickery

July is the Psychic Month
misremembering Ophelia
Imaginary Elegies

Zoe Dzunko

Browns Diner, Nashville
Snowed in, Brooklyn

Michael Farrell

burrito weather
elizabeth jolley redux
Rabbit Essay
Patrick Jones
Eating Birds 120

Rabbit Interview
Interview with Patrick Jones by Nicholas Walton-Healey and Jessica L. Wilkinson 132

Rabbit Review
Corey Wakeling
The Armpit and the Forearm:
A review of Benjamin Frater's 6am in the Universe and Pete Spence's Perrier Fever 156

Rabbit Favourites:
Poems for Eating and Drinking 164

Rabbit Bios: 170
Ann Vickery
Dawn exposure for those not as faithful or as courageous as Rin Tin Tin barking at black metal bands who've now made it big. Try harder to make the 32 seconds, or was it 32 pages, out of oblivion.
It's been a long season of cooking tips and love sonnets crossing over before the crowned cathedrals of Wyatt and Keats.
I count grocery beads, a hail dairy for each breakfast of nails, TV allegory, and Afghanistan embedment.
Living half-dressed in a Western suburb, I try not to have projects.
Somewhere a train is going through space fast—not through a living room although it still impresses one behind closed doors.
Maupassant never did train-spotting with mantelpiece, although Flaubert did suggest it. This Sunday, I'm reading _Panic and Plenitude, Suspicion and Sympathy_, great novels Jane Austen never wrote but which moonlight persuasively as quasi-Ludo policy for refugees, shelved _prestolatio prestolatio_ in Capital Hill's kitchen cupboard beside Christmas Island, Sri Lankan sambol, and a code-red cod liver oil. Chutney me now and lyric paste the remains. Forbes as extra from the final Harry Potter flick holds aloft the ashen magic-stick and bids Voldemort a cheerful goodbye.
Irony proper is piqued. And so spirit-imbibing, we smash our glasses and burn a toast to Rasputin's torrid resurrection:
hellebore to the plains; be Caesar flanked!